Science Side Quest

If you've ever caught a glimpse of a shooting star, chances are you made a wish. But in your excitement, did you notice the color it was emitting? Next time, take a closer look because you may notice one color or several as the meteor travels through the sky. This is the result of its chemical composition. Calcium leads to a blue hue and sodium results in yellow, while other elements exude red and green. Meteoroids travel many miles very quickly before vaporizing, but their brief show makes for a magical moment.
